New Website Provides Employment Assistance to Ohioans with Disabilities

COLUMBUS, OHIO – October is National Disability Employment Awareness Month, and Ohioans with disabilities now have a free, easy way to search for jobs and access information about a variety of work-related resources. Working in tandem with OhioMeansJobs.com, OhioMeansAccessibility.com will help job seekers with disabilities post resumes, search for jobs and more.

“The Ohio Department of Job and Family Services is committed to expanding employment opportunities for all Ohioans,” said Ohio Department of Job and Family Services Director Cynthia C. Dungey. “Whether you are looking to start a business, grow your business, begin a new career or take advantage of a job-training course, OhioMeansAccessibility.com can help.”

After posting a resume at OhioMeansJobs.com, job seekers with disabilities can indicate whether they would like to be referred to employers specifically looking to hire individuals with disabilities. The website also offers information about starting a business, building financial assets, work incentive programs, transitioning from school to work, health care and more.

For employers, the site offers a wealth of information about hiring incentives, workplace accommodations, employment law, and engaging a qualified and diverse workforce.

Interested Ohioans should visit www.OhioMeansJobs.com and click on the icon below or go directly to www.OhioMeansAccessibility.com.

OhioMeansJobs.com was recently expanded to include career exploration services for students, job-search and job-training information for adults, and a Business Support Center for employers looking to hire. Ohioans can post their resumes, search tens of thousands of job openings, learn about training programs and live-chat with career counselors, among many other things. The website is free for both job seekers and employers.
